Tejano Legend RAM Herrera Opens Up

About Cancer Battle, Faith, and a New Chapter in Music

Written by Kim Melchor

Ram Herrera didn't grow up expecting to be a star. He grew up in Victoria Courts, a housing project near what is now the Alamodome, in what he calls a "very poor neighborhood." He stuttered badly as a child. He was terrified of auditions. And He stumbled into Tejano music almost by accident.

Decades later he's one of the genre's most enduring voices. And he's not done yet. In a recent interview with La Voz, Herrera spoke candidly on his origins, his cancer diagnosis, and why he is headed to Nashville to record new music.

And although his career has primarily been Tejano, Herrera said it wasn't his first love. He trained in more operatic styles during high school, where he won competitions. His older brother Manuel Herrera pushed him onto the stage when he was too afraid to go on alone. Initially, it was a way to support his family, but eventually Tejano music became vitally important.

Over the course of his career, Herrera has won Tejano Music Awards for Male Vocalist of the Year and Entertainer of the Year, and his catalog of more than 400 songs includes beloved hits such as 'Amor Querido,' 'Pensamientos,' and 'Rosas Para Una Rosa'. Most recently, he received a lifetime achievement award at the 2025 Tejano Music Awards.

His most personal song, he said, is 'Entre Cantina Y Cantina' — a track rooted in a true story. He described how a bandmate confided a dark chapter of his life to another musician during a late-night breakdown on the road, and how that story became the song. The musician later took his own life. "It has a special meaning in my heart," Herrera said.

Health has become as much a part of Herrera's story as music. He delayed prostate cancer screening for years despite a family nudge at age 50. By the time he sought help, the problem had progressed. "I thought I was Superman," he said. His message to fans — particularly those in the Mexican American community, where he said medical appointments are sometimes avoided out of cultural habit — was blunt: "Go to the doctor, get checked out. Don't listen to your uncle."

Herrera said he came through the experience with the help of his wife, Lizé Herrera, who is also a motivational speaker. "It was a very dark time for me. She was there for me."

These days, the Tejano scene has changed considerably. Herrera says, however, "I'm traditional. I stick to my guns." Herrera is now preparing to record in Nashville, with new material in both Tejano and country. The outpouring of support he received during his illness, he said, still catches him off guard. "I didn't feel worthy of it," he said. "There's a lot of love out there. It's amazing."

"My mom said I learned to sing before I talked," Herrera said. "I stuttered very bad as a child. When I sang, I didn't stutter. It was kind of therapy for me." Later, a choir teacher told him he sang "too pretty" for the genre, but a DJ told him that if he sang off-key and played accordion, he could make a fortune.

CHECKLIST FOR WOMEN

Take this checklist to your next doctor appointment. These recommendations are for people at average risk for cancer. Your doctor can help you develop a more tailored screening plan if needed.

AGES 21-29

- Ask your doctor for a breast cancer risk assessment when you are 25.
- Consider a clinical breast exam every one to three years to check for breast cancer, starting at age 25.
- Pap test every three years starting at age 21, or HPV test every five years starting at age 25.

AGES 30-39

- Consider a clinical breast exam every one to three years to check for breast cancer.
- HPV test, with or without a Pap test, every five years to check for cervical cancer and HPV.

AGES 40-44

- Mammogram and clinical breast exam every year to check for breast cancer.
- HPV test, with or without a Pap test, every five years to check for cervical cancer and HPV.

AGES 45 AND OLDER

- Mammogram and clinical breast exam every year to check for breast cancer. Your doctor can help you decide if you should continue screening after age 75.
- HPV test, with or without a Pap test, every five years to check for cervical cancer and HPV. If you're age 65 or older, your doctor can help you decide if you need screening.
- Colonoscopy every 10 years to check for colorectal cancer. Alternatives to colonoscopy include virtual colonoscopy every five years, or stool-based tests every one to three years depending on the test. If you're age 75-85, your doctor can help you decide if you need screening. MD Anderson does not recommend screening after age 85.

Regardless of your age, practice awareness.

This means you should be familiar with your body so that you will notice changes. Report them to your doctor without delay.

If you have had any medical care that affects these areas of your body, talk to your doctor for individualized screening guidelines.

A Journey of Strength and Healing

In July 2025, Monica Lopez was diagnosed with stage 3 cervical cancer. “God help me,” she recalls saying, heartbroken and unsure how to tell her children.

Leaning on her faith, Lopez began immediate treatment. She underwent six weeks of radiation, six rounds of chemotherapy, followed by a surgical procedure and four cycles of brachytherapy.

Despite the physical and emotional toll, she remained grounded in her belief that she would get through it.

Three months after completing treatment, Lopez received life-changing news—she was cancer-free.

“I will forever remain in God’s hands,” she said.

Lopez continues under medical care and expresses deep gratitude for her family, friends, and the supportive team at MD Anderson Cancer Center. She also found strength in a cancer survivor support group through her church.

Today, she embraces life with joy, spending time with her granddaughters and looking forward to the birth of another.

Her journey is a testament to faith, resilience, and the power of community.

Un Camino de Fuerza y Sanación

En julio de 2025, Monica Lopez fue diagnosticada con cáncer cervical en etapa 3. “Dios ayúdame”, recuerda haber dicho, con el corazón roto y sin saber cómo decírselo a sus hijos.

Apoyándose en su fe, Lopez comenzó el tratamiento de inmediato. Recibió seis semanas de radiación, seis rondas de quimioterapia, seguidas de un procedimiento quirúrgico y cuatro ciclos de braquiterapia.

A pesar del desgaste físico y emocional, se mantuvo firme en su creencia de que saldría adelante.

Tres meses después de completar el tratamiento, recibió una noticia que le cambió la vida: estaba libre de cáncer.

“Siempre permaneceré en las manos de Dios”, expresó.

Lopez continúa bajo cuidado médico y agradece profundamente a su familia, amistades y al equipo de apoyo en MD Anderson Cancer Center. También encontró fortaleza en un grupo de apoyo para sobrevivientes de cáncer en su iglesia.

Hoy, disfruta la vida con alegría, pasando tiempo con sus nietas y esperando el nacimiento de otra más.

Su historia es un testimonio de fe, resiliencia y el poder de la comunidad.

CHECKLIST FOR MEN

Take this checklist to your next doctor appointment. These recommendations are for people at average risk for cancer. Your doctor can help you develop a more tailored screening plan if needed.

AGES 45-74

- Speak with your health care provider about the benefits and risks of prostate screening.
- If you choose prostate cancer screening, begin at age 45 with a baseline PSA test. Strongly consider a baseline digital rectal exam. Continue testing as indicated by your previous test results.
- Colonoscopy every 10 years to check for colorectal cancer. Alternatives to colonoscopy include virtual colonoscopy every five years, or stool-based tests every one to three years depending on the test.

AGES 75 AND OLDER

- If you're age 75-85, your doctor can help you decide if you need screening for prostate and colorectal cancers.
- MD Anderson does not recommend screening for prostate and colorectal cancers after age 85.

Word from the Editor

Hello Neighbors,

Thank you for your continued support. I sincerely hope you enjoy the stories featured in this edition.

This month, we are proud to highlight an exclusive interview with Tejano star Ram Herrera, who shares insights into his background, career, and his recent battle with cancer. In connection with this important topic, MD Anderson also provides valuable information on cancer screenings, along with an inspiring cancer survivor story.

We also cover the recent Election Day activity in Denver Harbor, where voters experienced several challenges at the polls. Despite these issues, approximately 700 residents cast their votes on Election Day, with an additional 300 participating during early voting at other locations—bringing the total to around 1,000 Denver Harbor residents who made their voices heard in the March 3 primary. Congratulations to our community for showing up and participating.

In local education news, McReynolds Middle School will be closing its doors. Be sure to read the latest updates on this significant transition and what it means for the community. We also feature a story on the principal of Bezos Academy, located inside the Denver Harbor Multi-Service Building.

Lastly, have you heard about Little Libraries? Community member Jessica Campos has been working hard to bring free books to the neighborhood. Learn more about this exciting initiative and how you can get involved.

Thank you again for your continued readership and support.

La Leyenda del Tejano RAM Herrera

Habla abiertamente sobre su batalla contra el cáncer y un nuevo capítulo en la música

Escrito Por Kim Melchor

Ram Herrera no creció esperando ser una estrella. Creció en Victoria Courts, un proyecto de vivienda cerca de lo que hoy es el Alamodome, en lo que él mismo describe como un "vecindario muy pobre". De niño tartamudeaba mucho. Le aterraban las audiciones. Y casi por accidente llegó a la música tejana.

Décadas después, es una de las voces más duraderas del género. Y no ha terminado. En una entrevista reciente con La Voz, Herrera habló sin rodeos sobre sus orígenes, su diagnóstico de cáncer y por qué se dirige a Nashville a grabar nueva música.

"Mi mamá decía que aprendí a cantar antes de hablar", dijo Herrera. "De niño tartamudeaba muy mal. Cuando cantaba, no tartamudeaba. Era como una terapia para mí." Más adelante, un maestro de coro le dijo que cantaba "demasiado bonito" para el género, pero un DJ le comentó que si cantara desafinado y tocara acordeón, podría ganar una fortuna.

Aunque su carrera ha sido principalmente tejana, Herrera reconoce que no fue su primer amor. Se formó en estilos más operísticos durante la preparatoria, donde ganó concursos. Su hermano mayor, Manuel Herrera, lo empujó al escenario cuando tenía demasiado miedo de subir solo. Al principio fue una manera de sostener a su familia, pero con el tiempo la música tejana se volvió algo vital.

A lo largo de su carrera, Herrera ha ganado los Tejano Music Awards como Vocalista Masculino del Año y Animador del Año, y su catálogo de más de 400 canciones incluye éxitos queridos como "Amor Querido", "Pensamientos" y "Rosas Para Una Rosa". Recientemente recibió un premio a la trayectoria en los Tejano Music Awards 2025.

Su canción más personal, dice, es "Entre Cantina Y Cantina", una rola con raíces en una historia real. Describió cómo un compañero de banda le confió un oscuro capítulo de su vida a otro músico durante una parada forzosa en la carretera, y cómo esa historia se convirtió en canción. El músico después se quitó la vida. "Tiene un significado especial en mi corazón", dijo Herrera.

La salud se ha vuelto parte de la historia de Herrera tanto como la música. Retrasó por años la detección del cáncer de próstata, a pesar de que su familia le recomendó hacerse un chequeo a los 50. Para cuando buscó ayuda, el problema ya había avanzado. "Pensé que era Superman", dijo. Su mensaje para los fanáticos, especialmente los de la comunidad mexicanoamericana, donde a veces se evitan las citas médicas por costumbres culturales, fue directo: "Ve al doctor, hazte un chequeo. No le hagas caso a tu tío."

ARRIBA: David "Bull" Arevalo con Ram Herrera

Herrera dice que salió adelante con la ayuda de su esposa, Lizé Herrera, quien también es conferencista motivacional. "Fue un momento muy oscuro para mí. Ella estuvo ahí para mí."

Hoy en día, la escena tejana ha cambiado considerablemente. Sin embargo, Herrera afirma: "Soy tradicional. Me mantengo fiel a lo mío." Ahora se prepara para grabar en Nashville con nuevo material tanto de tejano como de country. El apoyo que recibió de sus fanáticos durante su enfermedad, dice, todavía lo toma por sorpresa. "No me sentía merecedor", dijo. "Hay mucho amor ahí afuera. Es increíble."

Exámenes de detección de cáncer

LISTA DE VERIFICACIÓN PARA MUJERES

Lleve esta lista a su próxima cita con el médico. Estas recomendaciones son para personas en riesgo promedio de cáncer. Su médico puede ayudarla a elaborar un plan de detección más personalizado si fuera necesario.

EDAD: 21-29

- Pídale a su médico una evaluación del riesgo de cáncer del seno cuando tenga 25 años.
- Considere la posibilidad de hacerse un examen clínico de los senos cada uno a tres años para detectar el cáncer del seno, empezando a los 25 años.
- Prueba de Papanicolaou cada tres años o prueba de VPH cada cinco años empezando a los 25 años.

EDAD: 30-39

- Considere la posibilidad de hacerse un examen clínico de los senos cada uno a tres años para detectar el cáncer del seno.
- Prueba del virus del papiloma humano (VPH), con o sin la prueba de Papanicolaou, cada cinco años para detectar el cáncer de cuello uterino y el VPH.

EDAD: 40-44

- Mamografía y examen clínico de los senos cada año para detectar el cáncer del seno.
- Prueba del VPH, con o sin la prueba de Papanicolaou, cada cinco años para detectar el cáncer de cuello uterino y el VPH.

EDAD: 45 o más

- Mamografía y examen clínico de los senos cada año para detectar el cáncer del seno. Su médico puede ayudarla a decidir si debe seguir haciéndose la prueba después de los 75 años.
- Prueba del VPH, con o sin la prueba de Papanicolaou, cada cinco años para detectar el cáncer de cuello uterino y el VPH. Si tiene 65 años o más, su médico puede ayudarla a decidir si necesita una prueba de detección.
- Colonoscopia cada 10 años para detectar el cáncer colorrectal. Las alternativas a la colonoscopia incluyen la colonoscopia virtual cada cinco años, o las pruebas basadas en las heces cada uno a tres años, dependiendo de la prueba. Si tiene entre 75 y 85 años, su médico puede ayudarla a decidir si necesita una prueba de detección. MD Anderson no recomienda las pruebas de detección después de los 85 años.

LISTA DE VERIFICACIÓN PARA HOMBRES

Lleve esta lista a su próxima cita con el médico. Estas recomendaciones son para personas en riesgo promedio de cáncer. Su médico puede ayudarlo a elaborar un plan de detección más personalizado si fuera necesario.

EDAD: 45-74

- Hable con su proveedor de atención de la salud sobre los beneficios y los riesgos de las pruebas de detección de la próstata.
- Si opta por las pruebas de detección del cáncer de próstata, comience a los 45 años con una prueba de PSA inicial. Considere seriamente un examen digital del recto inicial. Continúe con las pruebas según los resultados de las pruebas anteriores.
- Colonoscopia cada 10 años para detectar el cáncer colorrectal. Las alternativas a la colonoscopia incluyen la colonoscopia virtual cada cinco años, o las pruebas basadas en las heces cada uno a tres años, dependiendo de la prueba.

EDAD: 75 o más

- Si tiene entre 75 y 85 años, su médico puede ayudarlo a decidir si necesita someterse a pruebas de detección de cáncer de próstata y colorrectal.
- MD Anderson no recomienda las pruebas de detección de los cánceres de próstata y colorrectal después de los 85 años.

Chaos at the Denver Harbor Election Polls on March 3, 2026

Written by Ricky Campos & Carolyn Lopez

Voter turnout in Denver Harbor continues to grow, and the nearly 1,000 residents who participated in the March 3, 2026 primary election should be recognized for making their voices heard. However, the day was marked by several concerning issues at the local polling site.

One major problem involved confusion over the legally required distance marker. Poll workers were reportedly instructed to move it as far as 1,000 feet from the entrance—well beyond the legal limit—creating confusion and concern. One worker felt intimidated after hearing about a potential $500 fine for noncompliance. Witnesses also reported inappropriate remarks from an election judge, including questions about identification and references to ICE.

Voters faced long lines, likely due to an insufficient number of voting machines and technical issues, including problems with ink equipment. Spanish-speaking voters were especially impacted, as no translators were available to assist them. In one instance, an elderly voter was unable to receive needed language support.

At approximately 6:45 p.m., individuals still waiting in line were told they might not be able to vote. Fortunately, this issue was later resolved and those in line were ultimately allowed to cast their ballots. Constables were also called to the site during the day.

Community members, including Precinct Chair Rene Porras and volunteer Daisy Lozano, raised concerns about these irregularities after witnessing them firsthand.

While it remains unclear how or when these issues will be resolved, organizations like Denver Harbor Cares remain committed to advocating for improvements. Establishing Denver Harbor as a permanent voting center—and expanding accessible voting centers countywide—could help prevent similar challenges in the future.

A key question moving forward is: how are polling locations selected, and who is responsible for ensuring they are properly equipped to serve the community?

Denver Harbor Says Goodbye to McReynolds Middle

Written by Kim Melchor

McReynolds Middle School, a fixture of the Denver Harbor neighborhood for generations, will close its doors at the end of the 2025-2026 school year as part of an HISD initiative to consolidate underenrolled campuses across the city.

The school that began nearly a century ago as Johnston Junior High, opening with 652 students, has grown, changed names, and survived countless transitions. This one will be its last. The HISD Board of Managers voted unanimously in February to shutter the school, citing declining enrollment and aging facilities. McReynolds, located at 5910 Market St., has less than 300 students this year. The school will merge with Fleming Middle School and relocate to the Mickey Leland College Preparatory Academy campus in the Fifth Ward.

Principal Dr. Kenisha Spears Richardson has spent the months since the announcement finding reasons for genuine optimism. The new campus is newer and better equipped," she said, and the academic offerings will expand. "We're getting the best of both of what our schools have to offer, but in a beautiful building," Richardson said. She urged parents to attend upcoming campus tours and stay connected through ParentSquare. HISD has also committed to shuttle service from the current McReynolds campus to Mickey Leland for the 2026-27 and 2027-28 school years, along with dedicated family support teams throughout the transition.

Keeping the Memory Alive

Even as the school prepares to close, a Legacy Committee is forming to make sure McReynolds is honored properly before that final bell. Dr. Richardson assembled a team of educators with deep roots in the school; among them theater teacher and alumna Regina Evans-Jones, counselor Ruby Surratt, and sixth-grade math teacher Kandice Melchor.

The committee is focused on gathering input and planning events through June 4. A community meeting is tentatively set for early April, where residents, alumni, and families can share ideas for how to honor the school's history. The FACE department — HISD's Family and Community Engagement division — has committed funding to support the effort.

Looking Forward

When asked about feedback, Surratt said response has been positive once people understand what the new campus looks like, and referenced a student who came back saying that the campus is beautiful. Evans-Jones was pleased to hear "my male Hispanic and male African American boys telling me how excited they are, how they can't wait to get into the building." Melchor said, "They absolutely deserve a newer building. They absolutely deserve to learn in an environment that reflects the hard work that they're doing."

What They'll Carry With Them

Evans-Jones grew up in the Fifth Ward, just across the tracks. Nearly her whole family came through McReynolds before her. She was in track, band, and home economics — and the teachers here, she said, gave her everything.

"They are the reason why I am who I am today, because they gave me a voice." Coming back to teach in the same building where she grew up has been something she doesn't take for granted and called it a blessing.

Surratt said McReynolds shaped her professionally in ways she couldn't have anticipated. Starting as a science teacher and moving into counseling, she has dealt with every kind of challenge this community carries. "I don't think there's anything that can come my way that I can't handle, because in here, I'm dealing with it all." She's watched students grow up, leave, and find their way, and she said she'll keep watching, wherever she lands next.

Melchor came to McReynolds out of love for the Denver Harbor community and in the footsteps of her uncle Roland Melchor, whose years teaching math here showed her what it meant to be committed to a place and its people. "What brought me to McReynolds was my love for this community," she said. "Kids are the way we're going to be able to improve communities."

Dr. Richardson said her time here uncovered a family connection to Denver Harbor she hadn't fully known — her parents married at a nearby church and her aunt worked at the local post office. The assignment, she said, turned out to be a kind of homecoming.

McReynolds has survived many years of Houston's evolution and transformation, and outlasting names, buildings, and administrations. The building will close. The committee will gather the memories. As Dr. Richardson said, "I would want for my community to be just as loud and just as visible moving five minutes, seven minutes up the road."

Child First, Always: Day Mullings on What Matters at Bezos Academy Denver Harbor

Written by Kim Melchor

BEZOS ACADEMY

“That means participating in activities that we have, such as rodeo picnic, winter feast, or family advisory committee, just different ways they can contribute.” She said she wants families to feel “this is home.”

When it comes to support outside the classroom, Mullings described both relationship-building and concrete help. “We also have a social work specialist that supports our families through things such as maybe inadequate housing, food insecurity... counseling, Medicaid, Medicare, initiation, just multiple things, kind of whatever the parent needs.”

Partnerships, she said, are local and intentional. “We partner with Target Hunger, the multi-service center, the food bank,” Mullings said, describing help that can provide support for families outside of the school.

And then there’s the side of Mullings students might not know — the one that glitters. “I make semi-precious jewelry,” she said, describing a hobby. “I make things out of silk stone, and aquamarine. I love jewelry. I love stone.” She described a similar kind of transformation in the classroom, too — “the light... explodes in them” when a new skill clicks with the children.

Mullings returned to what she most wants families to hear: “I want them to know that their children are first. Here, their children are first and always.” She explains, “Child first, always, is the number one leadership principle that we follow.”

There’s a moment Day Mullings keeps coming back to when she talks about young children learning something new — the instant it clicks, the instant when confidence shows up on a child’s face. She continued, describing what that looks like in real time: “When they realize, oh, I can read. I can sound out these syllables. I do know what syllables are. You know, I can count to 20, or I can even count to 100.”

Mullings is the Head of School at the Denver Harbor Campus of Bezos Academy, located in the multiservice center. Launched in 2020, the local school is part of a network of tuition-free, Montessori-inspired preschools for children ages 3–5, funded by Jeff Bezos’ Day 1 Academies Fund. “I’m most proud of the children that we’ve taken from below standard to kindergarten written,” Mullings said in an interview with La Voz.

Mullings’ background is in leadership and special education, and previously specialized in work supporting deaf and hard-of-hearing children. “I was, and will still am, a deaf educator and a cochlear implant specialist,” she said. “I would help children determine what language to use, whether it’s sign language or oral language, and then also how they would access that, either through hearing aid technology or cochlear implant technology.”

Her goals for at Bezos this year center on family involvement and preparing students for the next step. “It’s family engagement for one, making sure the children are kindergarten-ready, and ensuring that our families are totally participatory in the school and in their child’s learning,” she said.

Denver Harbor se despide de McReynolds Middle

Escrito Por Kim Melchor

McReynolds Middle School, un referente del vecindario de Denver Harbor por generaciones, cerrará sus puertas al final del año escolar 2025-2026 como parte de una iniciativa del Distrito Escolar Independiente de Houston (HISD) para consolidar planteles con baja inscripción en toda la ciudad.

La escuela que comenzó hace casi un siglo como Johnston Junior High, inaugurada con 652 estudiantes, ha crecido, cambiado de nombre y sobrevivido innumerables transiciones. Ésta será la última. La Junta de Administradores del HISD votó por unanimidad en febrero para cerrar la escuela, citando la disminución en la matrícula y el envejecimiento de las instalaciones. McReynolds, ubicada en 5910 Market St., tiene menos de 300 estudiantes este año. La escuela se fusionará con Fleming Middle School y se trasladará al plantel de la Mickey Leland College Preparatory Academy en el Fifth Ward.

La directora Dra. Kenisha Spears Richardson ha pasado los meses desde el anuncio encontrando razones para un optimismo genuino. “El nuevo plantel es más nuevo y está mejor equipado”, dijo, y las opciones académicas se ampliarán. “Estamos obteniendo lo mejor de lo que cada una de nuestras escuelas tiene para ofrecer, pero en un edificio hermoso”, dijo Richardson. Instó a los padres a asistir a los recorridos del plantel y mantenerse conectados a través de ParentSquare. El HISD también se comprometió a ofrecer servicio de transporte en camioneta desde el plantel actual de McReynolds hasta Mickey Leland para los años escolares 2026-27 y 2027-28, junto con equipos de apoyo familiar dedicados durante toda la transición.

Preservando la memoria

Incluso mientras la escuela se prepara para cerrar, se está formando un Comité de Legado para asegurarse de que McReynolds sea honrada adecuadamente antes de que suene ese último timbre.

La Dra. Richardson reunió un equipo de educadores con raíces profundas en la escuela; entre ellos la maestra de teatro y exalumna Regina Evans-Jones, la consejera Ruby Surratt y la maestra de matemáticas de sexto grado Kandice Melchor.

El comité se enfoca en recopilar ideas y planificar eventos hasta el 4 de junio. Se prevé una reunión comunitaria para principios de abril, donde los residentes, exalumnos y familias podrán compartir ideas sobre cómo honrar la historia de la escuela. El departamento FACE — la división de Participación Familiar y Comunitaria del HISD — se ha comprometido a financiar el esfuerzo.

Mirando hacia adelante

Al preguntarle sobre la reacción de la comunidad, Surratt dijo que la respuesta ha sido positiva una vez que las personas conocen cómo es el nuevo plantel, y mencionó a una estudiante que regresó diciendo que el plantel es hermoso.

Evans-Jones se mostró emocionada: “Escuchar a mis alumnos hispanos y afroamericanos contarme lo emocionados que están, cómo no pueden esperar para entrar al edificio”.

Melchor dijo: “Se merecen un edificio más nuevo. Se merecen absolutamente aprender en un entorno que refleje el arduo trabajo que están haciendo”.

Lo que se llevarán

Evans-Jones creció en el Fifth Ward, justo al otro lado de las vías. Casi toda su familia pasó por McReynolds antes que ella. Estuvo en atletismo, banda y economía del hogar, y los maestros de aquí, dijo, le dieron todo. “Ellos son la razón por la que soy quien soy hoy, porque me dieron voz.” Volver a enseñar en el mismo edificio donde creció ha sido algo que no da por sentado, y lo llamó una bendición.

Surratt dijo que McReynolds la formó profesionalmente de maneras que no hubiera anticipado. Comenzando como maestra de ciencias y pasando a la consejería, ha enfrentado todo tipo de desafíos que esta comunidad conlleva. “No creo que haya nada que se me presente que no pueda manejar, porque aquí adentro lo estoy manejando todo.” Ha visto a estudiantes crecer, graduarse y abrirse camino, y dijo que seguirá viendo ese progreso dondequiera que esté.

Melchor llegó a McReynolds por amor a la comunidad de Denver Harbor y siguiendo los pasos de su tío Roland Melchor, cuyos años enseñando matemáticas aquí le mostraron lo que significa comprometerse con un lugar y su gente. “¿Qué me trajo a McReynolds? Mi amor por esta comunidad”, dijo. “Los niños son la manera en que vamos a poder mejorar las comunidades.”

La Dra. Richardson dijo que su tiempo aquí le reveló una conexión familiar con Denver Harbor que no conocía del todo: sus padres se casaron en una iglesia cercana y su tía trabajó en la oficina postal local. El nombramiento, dijo, resultó ser una especie de regreso a casa.

McReynolds ha sobrevivido muchos años de la evolución y transformación de Houston, sobreviviendo a nombres, edificios y administraciones. El edificio cerrará. El comité reunirá los recuerdos. Como dijo la Dra. Richardson: “Quiero que mi comunidad sea igual de ruidosa e igual de visible moviéndose cinco minutos, siete minutos por el camino.”

HYM Little Free Library Update

Bringing books, resources, and community directly to our neighborhoods

Our meetings are held on the 3rd Sunday of every month from 4–8 PM at: 1013 Majestic Street

Stop by—we always have good food and community building.

Teaching for Liberation
How Aurelio Montemayor Helped Communities Reclaim Education

Aurelio M. Montemayor holding El Curso de la Raza.

We're expanding our Little Free Libraries across Denver Harbor and the East End, and recently completed a new installation at Porrás Prontito Restaurant. Within minutes, it had its first reader—an adult who stopped, looked through the books, and took one. Moments like that remind us this work is for everyone.

Houston Young Monarchs Builders Alliance is now building two new Little Free Libraries at the Denver Harbor Multi-Service Center:

- One dedicated to seniors at the center
- One mobile library on wheels for the community

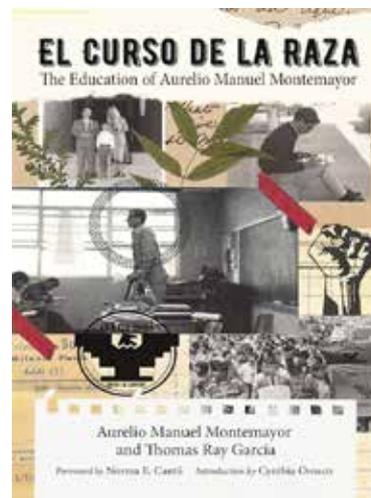

The mobile library is being designed with multiple compartments and will go beyond books. We're planning to include items like seeds, yarn, and craft supplies—things that support creativity, connection, and everyday life.

We're hoping others will join us in imagining, designing, and building it together, because access should meet people where they are and reflect what they actually need.

Each new effort is a reminder that:

- Books still matter
- Stories still shape neighborhoods
- Access to knowledge should live within our own community

Featured Book: El Curso de la Raza

El Curso de la Raza

By Aurelio M. Montemayor

reflects on a lifetime of work in education, community organizing, and cultural identity. His story shows how learning doesn't only happen in classrooms—it happens through:

- Lived experience
- Community struggle
- The fight to be seen and heard

The book is a reminder that when systems fail communities, communities respond. It captures a history of families and educators who refused to accept limits placed on them and instead built their own paths forward. And behind this powerful book is a powerful story.

Before becoming a national leader in education, Aurelio Montemayor was a teacher on the Texas–Mexico border, working with students in schools that were never built with them in mind.

He saw it early: Students were expected to follow, not question; to memorize, not understand; to fit into a system that didn't reflect their lives, language, or history.

So he did something different—he taught them to think.

That shift came with consequences. When Montemayor encouraged students to question what they were being taught and understand the systems shaping their lives, it challenged the structure of schooling—and he was pushed out.

HYM Little Free Library Update

Bringing books, resources, and community directly to our neighborhoods

But that moment didn't end his work—it defined it.

During the Chicano Movement, Montemayor became part of a generation that refused to accept education as it was given. He:

- Co-founded one of the first independent Chicano colleges
- Developed El Curso de la Raza, a model rooted in community, culture, and political education

He didn't just study change—he helped build it. For over 50 years, through his work with the Intercultural Development Research Association, he has worked with families across Texas and beyond, helping them step into leadership and demand a voice in their children's education.

As he shared:

“Education is the central piece in my life... teaching for liberation.”

That belief lives inside his book—not just as a personal story, but as a reflection of something bigger: communities creating their own paths to learning when systems fail them.

And that's why his story matters right now.

Here in Denver Harbor:

- Schools are losing resources
- Programs are disappearing
- Campuses are at risk of closing

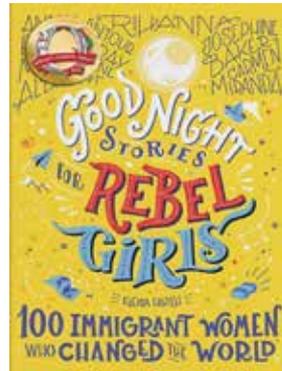

Families are once again being left to fill in the gaps.

Montemayor's story reminds us this has happened before—and each time, communities responded not by waiting, but by organizing, teaching, and building something of their own.

This book doesn't just tell us what happened—it helps us understand what we're living through now.
